

OUTSTANDING STUDENT AWARD

MASTER OF SCIENCE IN NUTRITION

The Department of Nutrition and Dietetics recognizes outstanding students for their exceptional contributions to the department, the university and their greater community.

The Outstanding Graduate Student Award recognizes graduate students in the Master of Science program in Nutrition who have exhibited academic excellence and are leaders in the classroom, work setting, the profession of nutrition and dietetics, or in their greater community. Students currently enrolled in a Master of Science in Nutrition program are eligible for this award.

Instructions for Submitting Nominations:

Thank you for nominating a student for a student leader award! For the committee to evaluate your nomination, we request that you answer each of the following prompts completely and include examples of how the nominee excels in the following attributes.

Name of individual you would like to nominate: _____

Describe the nominee's participation in academics. Please include any actions that stand out in the classroom (taking more than the required 30 credits, or a heavy credit load), going above and beyond to help other students, or attending additional learning opportunities through the graduate school, the Department, or campus (i.e. meetings with the Writing Center, attending workshops on library resources, etc.) If the student has any publications or professional presentations, please list these here. If the student is seeking additional coursework, training, or certification above the MS courses please tell us here.

Describe contributions the nominee has made in any leadership capacity on campus, in professional organizations, work requirements, or in their community. This could include volunteer activities, holding a position on a leadership board, or serving as a preceptor/mentor to other undergraduate students. It may also include additional responsibilities at work or in a volunteer position, like offering presentations or workshops.
